" Check Before You Check the Dependent Box "

You can reduce the amount of your taxes or increase your tax refunds by claiming an additional personal exemption for each of your dependents. You may also save thousands of dollars by claiming the child tax credit, the child and dependent care tax credit, and the earned income tax credit.

However, the IRS rules for claiming a dependent – child or relative – aren’t as easy as picking a name off your family tree. Many possible scenarios make it hard to determine qualified dependents for your tax return. Here are the general tests to help you determine a qualified child dependent. He or she can be a biological, step-, adopted or foster child; a full, half or stepsibling; or a grandchild, nephew or niece – but only if the person lives with you for at least six months and one day of the year.

Only one taxpayer can claim a child as a dependent. If the child is under shared custody, the household where he or she spends the most prescribed time gets the prize. If the child spends equal time between the two parents, the one with the bigger adjusted gross income (AGI) can claim the child as a dependent.

The child dependent must be under age 19 by Dec. 31 of the tax year. If the person is a full-time student for at least five months out of the year, he or she can be a dependent until the age of 24. There is no age limit for dependents who are totally and permanently disabled.
